Head to Head is rocking along—if your ad isn't in it this month, either it got here after 60 others and will appear next month, or you sent in more than one ad, so we chose one to print (one ad per person per month).

Hey Sam and Bill and Jim,

How come Fridge said he wanted his disc player back from the Is's stomach, but when Sarah had it, it was a tape player?

Nathan Glynn

'Cause we goofed. Thanks for pointing it out to everyone.

Hey Sam,

If you keep having so many issues with Sarah but without Maxx, you're going to have to change the title to "The Maxx's Pal, Sarah James."

OK—we will.

Dear Sam Kieth,

I have just read Issue 16 of The Maxx. In the letters I read Issues 21-30 were going to be about Sarah. What about doing a storyline about Mr Gone?

Your fan,
Derek Sutherland
Bristol, VA

OK—we will.

Dear Sam,

You can write! Believe in yourself. The Maxx #16 was brilliant. You tied up the whole "Is in jail" storyline. Sarah's grown so much as a character that I don't think we've even hit the tip of her iceberg. And to anyone who thinks that The Maxx should appear in the comic because it's named after him, too bad. Sarah's story was just as important as any Maxx story. This was a stellar issue that has the month's best line—"Freeze" was the cliché the cops chose." This issue is The Critic's Pick of the Month.

Hallo Sam Kieth etc.,

I love your Maxx. He seems the tragic Hero. I just this past year have started to read this wonderful storyline and great pictures too. I can really relate to it. My family just recently went through some big problems like my older sister accused my dad of molestation. She put me between her and him. Knowing I love them both, I didn't know who to believe. And I felt hurt that I disbelieved one of them. I cried a lot, then I stopped and repressed feelings, ignored them. Then I tried to ignore their existence. It was hard to ignore my dad who was and is still very hurt by her allegations. My eldest sister says they are lies too. And my older sister says that my eldest sister is also disillusioned like my mother, who I just found out went into an asylum in Washington to receive shock treatments. I don't know why, but all I know is she was sick.

Now my sister is married and moved away (Thank God), though lately she has been trying to reconcile with me and I don't know about Dad. I am now almost 20 and I feel very bitter toward her and just frustrated with Dad and Mom and my other sister and only brother. Sometimes I don't know what to think.

I am going to art school in VA during fall of '95 and I hope to forget about it all, but no matter what I do, I won't know the truth. I have asked. Anyway right now Mom and Dad are going through PPS (Parental Pre-College Syndrome) and I get short-tempered and wish I had a place to get away. And that is where my Maxx books and my tree stump down by the lake come in. You see, cartoon characters aren't the only ones who have it bad. Believe me, I can identify with Sarah a little more because till graduation I wasn't ever accepted by people at my school and the only people I truly love and care for are dying and they happen to be my grandparents and it is just a little bit longer and the last of them will be gone.

Sorry I got so deep but I feel a little better for now.

K.S.

And:

Howdee Sam,

You know, while watching the animated version where Julie and Maxx are clipping toenails and we get a view of Julie's inner side, I was at a friend's house and felt tears. I tried hard to hold back; it didn't work. Then I just let it flow. It was not only Julie but me, too! And all too truthful.

You see, like Julie, I've been raped. Several times though. It still surfaces in my relationships; I don't think it could ever stop. I just get so angry thinking how anyone would make something so rotten and disgusting out of something I've always felt was so sacred, magical.

I've read some letters where people think you dwell on sex. I felt it's an issue that needs to be confronted in society. You seem to portray it perfectly, all the emotions the victim feels. I think you're doing it justice.

Also like Julie, I have a wild spirit no one can tame. And my experiences of being raped twisted it. I've made myself callous and sarcastic living on the streets, then my rape experiences enhanced those feelings. And since it happened at such a young age (14) and for so many years, until I was 21 (I'm 23 now), it's hard to break my cold ways.

BRAD MCGINTY
New York, NY

Your comic more than any other expresses if not just my, then all of humanity's feelings of suppression and disgust at not being able to live without the piss-lined, rat-filled cities we call home. The Maxx is the most realistic view of life, taking the conscious and unconscious and showing it to the viewers. It's the way people think. We are (some of us, at least) looking at all that modern man has done and realizing it's the most revolting thing since the dawn of time.

You also bring in the view of the intense freedom and strength we get from nature (if you prefer, the Outback). And if I ruled, all the cities would be destroyed and I'd allow for plants to overrun them. There's always the hint of the rage and desire for righteousness as the city constantly moves in on nature. These are all things that are very important for my desire to go out there and do something about it!

You'll probably get famous for animating Maxx on MTV $$$$. We all need to live off something. One thing: PLEASE, PLEASE don't sell Maxx out. Don't let those sleezeball Big

ARNAUD JACMAIN
Romainville, France

Shots tell you what to do. I respect your quality, don't change.

Maxx is mysterious and deep like learning about oneself and the pathways we all walk. Just keep doing what you're doing, Sam; you have the depth I (and hopefully others) crave in this shallow world!

Thank!

C.N.

Both of these last two letters were very moving to us, but due to their personal nature, we used initials instead of names. If either of you gals want to have your names printed, let us know.

And thanks for letting us know that we're not too far off the mark in portraying these experiences. It's always hard for guys to write about what women go through. The next letter was helpful, too.

Dear Mr. Kieth,

I really admire the depth of understanding with which you have created such a believable and interesting character as Julie. It is unbelievable and inspiring that a male can be so in-tune with the subconscious mind of a strong, introspective female. [Hey—I live with one.]

I also love that the main male character is a manifestation of her subconscious; it gives her total control of her logical and spiritual realities.

I also admire the short, straight-forward answers you give to some of the letters in Maxx Traxx...I've often thought that if you talk a lot, you don't have much to say, and because you don't talk a lot, you have much substance and a rich inner spiritual life.

Also, because The Maxx is you, it is that much more interesting to the readers and is a little soul-baring on your part.

And having a male protect you (as Maxx does Julie) is very alluring because he values her...I don't find it sexist at all. And I think that Maxx and Julie are the male/female parts of your personality.

Meg Goetsch
Sunnyvale, CA

Gadzooks—you have me totally bum-fuzzled! The Maxx is me? I've got the teeth but not the muscles. (Sigh)

Hi Mr. Kieth,

I have greatly enjoyed your work since you did Wolverine. I was dumbstruck by your art.
No one has been able to catch my eye since.
But I sent in this letter to ask some questions.

1. Will Sarah's "Maxx" be like Julie's?
2. If there was a movie, who would play Maxx?
3. Did you like the cake?

have any major comic shops, so we don't or hardly get Image comics. So I send for them to comic shops all around Australia, just so I never miss an issue, and I think it's worth it!

A quick geography lesson: if you haven't a clue where Alice Springs is, it's in the middle of Australia, in the middle of the so-called 'Outback'. This is what got me on to The Maxx. A friend of mine in Darwin told me of a review on your comic, stating The Maxx was from the Outback, making him possibly of Australian origin. This I laughed at, and told him to buy it for me so I could have a better laugh. But to my dismay I didn't laugh but was enthralled to buy the next issue, and then to go on and buy the first issue so I had a clue of what was going on. Your comic is great, amazing, but I feel it is an acquired taste, a comic for the connoisseurs of comic readers.

By the way I still don't have a clue of what's going on, maybe it is just my Gemini nature—they don't look too deeply into things. Well keep up the great work and good luck with future issues to come. Now to finish off the letter with a bit of Australian slang: "To all you true blues who read The Maxx, keep up the bloody great yakka. And to all those drongos that think it's a silly comic, well piss off down the pub and sink few tinnies".

Yours sincerely,
Calum Ludwig
Alice Springs N. T.,

Dear Sam,

How much of the fantasy worlds and Julie's subconscious did you plan out before you started writing? Did you know exactly what you were going to do, or did the characters give you the story as you went along. And did you try for the deep thoughts, hope, and connections that a lot of people seem to be getting from Julie and Maxx, or was that just a side effect of a good story?

Wind to thy wings,
Katie Clower
Columbis, SC

I'd like to tell you about the subconscious parts, but then they wouldn't be "subconscious."

Sorry to be a smartass—the real answer to your question is: somewhere in between. Two parts structure and one part improvisation.

On a good day.

Sure, we try for deep thoughts. Read the next letter.

Dear Sam-you-Is,

Your repetitious references to the room we all know so well have apparently left their mark on me. Maybe it's the heightened level of importance you've given to the throne room that has burned an impression in my head. It's where we're first introduced to Mr. Gone in Maxx #1, Outback Maxx falls into a primitive one in Maxx #3, Maxx spills his beans to Julie while in the can in Maxx #8, and Julie reflects while on the commode in the wonderful Maxx #9.

Then again maybe it's because I frequently critique your art there. Whatever the case, it's "still the best place in the world to think."

Jimmy Richardson,
Dallas, TX

It's still the best place in the world to "non-think," too.

Dear Sam,

Is that dead goldfish (Issue #5) in the Crappon in the Hat supposed to be Maxx's spirit animal?

One of your many real fans,
Matt DeGonia

That's pathetic. Even Maxx's spirit animal is alive, at least.

Sam,

I wrote in order to provide all the Maxx/Pez addicts out there with some history of the almighty Pez.

In the early 1940's, a man by the name of Edvard Haas created a compressed peppermint breath freshener. The name PEZ was derived by taking the first, middle, and last letters from the German for "peppermint" (PfefferminZ). Then in 1952, Pez was brought to the U.S., and the introduction of fruit flavors and character heads made their debut. Prior to the character heads were the headless dispensers with only a thumb grip to flip back; these are known to collectors as "Regulars."

Since the creation of character heads, there have been over 250 types. These types include many Disney characters, Winnie the Pooh, Zorro, the Flintstones, Smurfs, and the Muppets. There were the Peanuts characters [Snoopy makes a great Maxx], Little Orphan Annie, Bullwinkle, Popeye characters, Bozo the Clown, many Warner Brothers creations, the Green Hornet, Batman, the Hulk, Thor, Spiderman, Wonder Woman, and some Universal Studios monsters. Many animals such as lions, tigers, bears (oh my), elephants, a gorilla, some birds, cows, a panther, a crocodile, some cats, and an octopus have been Pez dispensers. Some extremely rare dispensers were the orange, pear, pineapple, and a "Make-a-Face" Pez dispenser, which came with 15 attachable parts and made 158 funny faces. My personal favorite was one from the '60's known as the "Psychedelic Eye."

SCOTT VANDENHEY

SCOTT '95

Signed,

Thanxx, Matt! More than we ever wanted to know about Pez dispensers. I'm going to tell them for advertising space.

They'll make a pineapple and not a Maxx?

SEX!!

Gotcha.

Did Sarah and Maxx really sex it up? I thought they were just sleeping together. Y'know, really sleeping...

Splitting turnips,
Jesse Kendall
West Sumner, ME

For the last time, Sarah and Maxx did NOT do the nasty. They just share a mind link, allowing us to see Sarah's pre-developed Outback.

Dear Mr. Kieth,

Maybe it's just me: there seems to be some stuff (a LOT of stuff) that's in the show and not the comic, like that scene with Sarah and the poster, fr'instance. Am I right, or am I just not reading hard enough? And if there is stuff there that's not in the book, will it be in the book someday?

Sincerely,
Charles Choi
Flushing, NY

Maybe.

Cool list of things that are in the cartoon but NOT in the comic:

Show Two: The pan across the city (with flashes of the Outback)

Sarah Show: The end, where she breaks down remembering the poster (originally in book but trimmed at last minute)

Last Show. Speaking of which...A few fans had some opinions about the last MTV show; here are some of the milder ones:

Dear Sam,

After just watching the finale of the Maxx cartoon I've only one thing to say:

HIS CLAWS ARE SPADES???

Wow! I had no idea. The only other time I experienced such enlightenment was when I realized that the women who lived across the street from my grandparents were lesbians.

Waiting for more revelations,
Josh

Dear Sam,

I finally figured out The Maxx's identity. At first I thought that he was Boof, but he's really...A GARDENER! (Bummer Noise)

Sincerely,
Jonathan Lee

Dear Mr. Kieth,

I know what you're doing. Tee hee. Ok, I'll tell you. On the last episode of The Maxx, as we all know, you guys added a scene near the end that was not in the comic. Maxx actually shedding his skin freaked many a Maxx reader, I'm sure. Underneath was a gardener who was tending a greenhouse of sorts. Logically, the Outback is totally made of organic material, which means Maxx is tending his Outback after Julie left. Hey, do I got it or what?

Sincerely,
Brad Winter

Maybe you got it, maybe you don't got it. We'll just have to wait and see, won't we?

Meanwhile, everybody calm down. This is only the beginning...
